The author of Following My Path, Bernard Martin, writes about his struggle, at the age of six, to understand that he was sexually different. Coming up gay in small towns in Indiana during the 1940s and 1950s, when the term "gay" didn't even exist, was difficult.

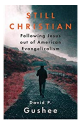

He is a retired educator of thirty years. He received his MA degree from 1982 and was a Title I Reading Coordinator for a large Ohio school system. He is a Christian with deep spiritual beliefs and a restorer of historic homes (three of which are on the National Register). He is the first white, single male to adopt an African American son in the state of Ohio, the grandfather of two adorable grandchildren (they're his he can see that), and a five-year opera singer. After twelve surgeries, this cancer has left him with half a face and one eye.

He looks back at his lifelong struggle with his strict, religious mother, who assured him that he was destined to go to hell if he didn't become heterosexual. In spite of the internal emotions that this caused, he managed to live a very interesting and fulfilling life!

Join him on his journey of his self-discovery and you will find that obstacles can be overcome!
